Dr. Andy Scott
International School Leadership

Dear Sir

Re: Value of ISL Modules

I would just like to confirm my appreciation for the leadership modules that I have done with your institution.

Of the various leadership courses that I have gone through, ISL modules are really the best. The first module I enrolled in, which was ISL Module 3: Building Relationships and Developing People, was more than an eye opener. As an international school leader, this was invaluable and I made a commitment that really there is no turning back. I am on my third module now and have absolutely no regrets about my involvement, when I consider the knowledge gained from the modules.

In fact our budget for 2015-2016, which commences in August 2015, includes a few modules for the school's leadership team which includes Coordinators and Heads of Department.

The modules are run in a very effective and considerate manner. One may argue that the courses are intense and school leaders are always very busy. However, I think the invaluable learning experiences are worth the precious time sacrificed. There is so much more that is gained through the discussions with other people doing the course. The interactions, be it with the teachers or other learners, are phenomenal. Besides content given out as part of the modules, the teachers of each module furnish us with resources that address issues that come up during the online discussions with each other. Of course, this is besides their willingness to provide individuals with research document that address the individual challenges.

I am quite happy to be involved in these very informative ISL modules. I would encourage any school leader who is interested in learning, teaching and growth of their institute to start by being a lead learner, from the renowned education expert from ISL.

Regards
